Brief Description:

A talk titled “Spark to Research” was organized by the Department of Computer Science, St. Paul's College, Kalamassery, as an initiative to motivate students towards research and higher studies. The session aimed to introduce students to the importance of research, innovation, and academic exploration in the field of computer science. The interactive session was led by Dr. Lince Rachel Varghese, Assistant Professor, Department of MCA, UC College Aluva, who shared valuable insights on research orientation, emerging technologies, and academic growth. The talk emphasized the significance of curiosity, critical thinking, and problem-solving in developing quality research. Through real-world examples and engaging discussions, the session inspired students to explore research opportunities, understand the research process, and cultivate a strong foundation for academic and professional advancement.

Benefits in terms of learning/skill/knowledge obtained:

The program enabled students to gain a clear understanding of research fundamentals, including problem identification, literature review, and emerging research areas. It enhanced their analytical and critical thinking abilities while encouraging a research-oriented mindset. Students gained awareness about higher education opportunities, research careers, and the role of innovation in technological advancement. The session also improved students' confidence in exploring academic research, strengthened their intellectual curiosity, and motivated them to pursue knowledge beyond the classroom. Overall, the program enriched students with essential research skills, academic awareness, and inspiration for lifelong learning.
